A U T U M N.
SOMETHING saith at my feet.—
Ah! it is a withered leaf;—
Something droppeth in my ear.—
Ah! it is a sound of grief.

"Now the Winter comes a near."
So the leaf unto me saith;
"For the younger Summer's gone,
And the elder's at his death."

See unwrapped in heavy folds,
Lies the tender hazy light
Which gave beauty to the day,
And bedimmed the stars at night.

Sere and crisp has grown the walk
That so late was soft and green.
Autumn with his yellow face
Slowly strolling there is seen.

See how with his trembling hand,
From the tree he plucks the leaf,
Spirituely he hurls it down,
Angered that his reign is brief.

Now his quick and chilly breath,
Roughly, madly, swiftly whirls
Blushes to the maiden's cheek,
And disorder to her curls.

Now he spits it long the road
As if mad to die he must;—
How like us in death he clings
Unto particles of dust.

Feele ye not his mighty breath?
Ah! 'tis changed from warm to cold,
So toward the world we change
When our life is growing old.

Things in Lowell—The Look for Free Trade.

Correspondence of The Tribune.

LOWELL, Mass., Dec. 9, 1845.

Dear Sir:—The Message of Mr. Polk and the Report of his Secretary have been received here, and have not made so much impression as these Free Trade nostrums might have led one to expect. The truth is the people of Lowell and of New England are well aware that they can stand Free Trade as long as any other part of the country can. They say, "Let the present Congress carry out Mr. Polk's recommendations, and we will sweep the country in '46 as we did in '40. We ride our time."

FLETCHER WEBSTER, Esq. gave us one of his lectures on China last night. The hall was filled with our most intelligent people. The Lecture gave very general satisfaction. He gives the second on Friday night.

A female named Bellinda Scott committed suicide in this city on Saturday by drowning. She had only been here two days, and was a stranger. Her body was recovered yesterday, and was found to be in a state of decomposition. No cause is assigned for the deed.

Our shooting continues good, and is being improved by men and boys. The weather to-day is cool and frosty. Mr. Cluer, the English Chartist, has been up to Manchester speaking on the Factory system and made a gross attack upon Varand of the American, one of the best in the world. Chuer has a foul mouth.

OLD WINE DISINTERRED.—A colored laborer engaged in making an excavation for a cistern in the yard of a dwelling house on the corner of Franklin Street and Court, about eight feet below the surface. When or by whom it was buried is unknown. The wine he lost its flavor, but not its strength, as its effects upon the discoverer amply proved. From the decayed condition of the casks it is evident that it must have been buried long ago.

THE BAROMETER struggled for many years with prejudice and ignorance, but there is now, we believe, few American ship masters who do not consult it faithfully and confide in it implicitly. And few who, from carelessness or want of knowledge, do not consider the value of their canvas and last spars and topmasts. Some ambitious Captains are unwilling to lose time by shortening sail while all is "fair"; but those who obey their barometers gain more by making sail when the wind begins to rise, even though it may be still yet, than those who lose by getting things snug in a notion of it.

A LEARNED DOG.—The London papers announce the arrival in that city from Paris, of a remarkably trained dog who is a perfect master of pantomimic action, and who, though he cannot speak, can read and write, and lay in wait for his master.

The wonder dog performed 50 nights successively at the Olympic Circus in Paris in "Le Cirque des Femmes." It is a shepherd's dog trained by a Mr. Wallens who has long been celebrated in Europe as the most accomplished instructor of the canine race. As an actor, a late London journal says, "that he knows his part perfectly, and that he thoroughly enters into the spirit of it. He has studied it—he has reasoned on it—he shows his thoughts and his actions, and the meaning of his words."

—A dog of distinction. He has all but spoken, has more than once saved human life, and, in 1833, the British government rewarded with a medal of honor his instructor, Mr. Wallens, for having, by the aid of Emile, (the dog) saved the life of a person who had fallen into the river Escout, at Ghent. All true geniuses, Emile is the most modest and kind hearted of mortals—to the learning of the sage, does the simplicity and playfulness of the infant. The petted of society, he is not his spoiled child; for, whatever may have been the case in by-gone years Emile has not now the most robust approach to capricious about him. He is, indeed, Le Roi des Chiens!
